Store Burned at Elmo.

W. T. Primm's general merchandise store at Elmo, Ky., was burned Sunday night about 3 o'clock a. m. The origin of the fire is unknown. The loss is supposed to be about $20,000, partially insured. His stable and ice house adjacent were also destroyed.

Asylum Patient Injured.

Mrs. Lucy Johnson, an Asylum patient, slipped and fell on the ice last Wednesday, badly fracturing one of her thighs. Her injury is a very painful one and may prove serious. Mrs. Johnson is a lady well known, having been raised in the county.

Failed to Get a License.

The application of Thos. Haden for a license to sell whisky at Golden Pond, Trigg county, pending in the Circuit Court by appeal, was dismissed by Judge Linn, at Cadiz last week. The Court dismissed the appeal for the reason that the copy of the order from the County Court, which was the basis of the appeal, was only attested by the Clerk giving the order, and not certified as required by the Code. There was an array of legal talent on both sides, and all were surprised at the sudden turn the matter had taken.

Fence Breakers Fined.

J. D. Moore, who some weeks ago shot Bud Smith, at Cerulean, was fined $50 in Judge Turne's court at that place, for carrying a pistol concealed about his person. Smith was also charged $10 for participating in the affair. The charge of shooting and wounding with intent to kill was not sustained in the Moore case. Both fines were satisfied and defendants released.

FARM FACTS.

A POLAR DARKNESS.

Bears and Deer the Only Animals Visible During the Long Night.

Sievert Broekmo, whose romantic adventures in Spitzbergen last winter have been chronicled, is a man forty years of age, of medium height, and very neatly built. He has a fine head and face and a most genial expression, but looks somewhat fierce when enveloped in the hood of his militza, or reindeer-skin tunic. During the last fifteen years he has been master of a sealing sloop engaged in Arctic hunting, at one time in Nova Zembla and the Kara sea, at another in Spitzbergen and its waters.

The accounts of arctic life as narrated by him are most entertaining, while it would be difficult to find a man more conversant with the life of the frigid zone or more fully versed in arctic history. He had been asked to sail a "Tembooring," the largest kind of open boat employed in the Nordland district, to the Chicago exhibition, and agreed to do so, but the plan was given up, as it met with great opposition from those who considered the venture, owing to the danger accompanying it, but little short of murder. Broekmo, it will be remembered, then decided on going to fetch his fishing sloop, which lay in Green Harbor, Spitzbergen, in a small open boat, to show that a little craft, well handled, could go anywhere. The boat was 14 feet long by 6 feet beam and 2 1/2 feet deep.

The voyage, on which he was accompanied by a youth of eighteen years, John Christiansen by name, was accomplished in thirteen days. On the return voyage in the little fishing sloop of ten tons, they were driven back by continuous gales and compelled to winter at Spitzbergen, at Middlehook, where there is a fine seven-room house, built by Nordenskjold in 1871, which, however, was plundered long since of all its furniture and stores. The two men had to live as best they could on reindeer and bear's flesh. The former they could not get nearer than Sassens bay, thirty-five miles from their abode, but bears were chance visitors to their quarters. One of Broekmo's last adventures with bruin occurred in June last, and though wounded in the head by the bear's claws, he killed it single-handed with his knife. The reindeer are particularly fat, and their coat is at its best in January. They are then exceptionally wary, and in order to shoot them Broekmo had to conceal himself behind a rock, while Christiansen worked round and drove the deer down to him.

From the time the sun disappears in the autumn, until its reappearance in the spring, life on Spitzbergen or its shores is only represented by the deers and bears. Fish disappear from its waters, and the walrus seek other parts, while the seals lie under the ice in little chambers, which receive air through a small hole leading to the surface, kept open by the breathing of the animal. Bruin, during the winter, lives solely on his own fat, as he cannot obtain a morsel of food, either on the frozen sea or snow-clad land, the reindeer being too wary and fleet of foot to allow of his stealing a march on them.

HERE'S A NOVEL GATE.

Constructed Fifty Years Ago of Various Garden Implements.

The old estates of England boast of a number of oddly designed iron gates, and Lloyd's Weekly Sun, of London, has been reproducing some of them. Given herewith is a representation of a peculiar gate fixed in the garden of Douglas castle, the summer residence of Lord Home, and made between forty and fifty years ago, by an ingenious village blacksmith named Watson. The garden implements used in the construction of the gate are more numerous than in the other cases that have come to hand, and, moreover, they are all carefully formed and arranged to make an artistic piece of workmanship. The Douglas castle is located in Lanarkshire and the odd gate is one of the sights of the place.

DOUGLAS GARDEN GATE.

ASSASSINATION!

WM. B. LYLE, A WHITE OVERSEER, SLAIN BY A NEGRO.

Pete Mays, the Murderer, Hunts Him Down and Kills Him While Feeding Stock—The Tragedy Occurred at W. S. Cheatham's, Near Longview.

There has been another killing in Christian County. Another white man has been shot down by a negro, and there seems to be no room for doubt that the killing was a brutal assassination.

William B. Lyle, a tenant on W. S. Cheatham's place, near Longview, was shot and killed by Pete Mays, col., last Thursday afternoon. The facts given below were detailed to the KENTUCKIAN reporter by eye witnesses, and others conversant with the bloody details, and may be relied upon as absolutely correct.

Lyle lived in a cabin in Mr. Cheatham's lot, near his house. He was a married man but his wife did not live with him. He was about 40 years old and a hard working man, but somewhat of a drinker. He was overseer on Mr. Cheatham's farm.

In another cabin some distance from Lyle's, John Thompson, a colored tenant, lived with his family, the stable being located between Lyle's and Thompson's houses.

Thursday afternoon Lyle had a bottle of whisky, and Thompson and Mays, who lived at J. B. Wood's, a mile away, dropped in to drink with Lyle. The bottle was passed around, all three taking a drink. While Mays was in his house Lyle said to him in a playful manner that a lock was missing from one of the doors, and that one of them must have taken it, and that he was certain it was not he. This angered Mays, who said in a threatening way, "Don't you accuse me of stealing," and ran his hand in his pocket as if to draw a weapon. Lyle picked up a stick of stove wood and struck Mays, making a slight bruise on his head and drawing blood. His hat was knocked off, and Mays, after running off a hundred yards or more, came back to get his hat. Lyle told him to get his hat and go away and stay away. Mays left and started towards Mr. Wood's, where he lived. He stopped at the cabin of Allen Catlett, col., and tried to borrow a gun, saying he wanted to shoot a rabbit. Failing to get one he next went to Hamp Davie's cabin and tried to get a gun on the same pretext. Not securing a weapon he went on to Mr. Wood's and asked for the loan of his gun, saying he wanted to kill a rabbit. Mr. Wood had frequently loaned him the gun before, and not supposing there was to be any trouble, let him have it, loaded in both barrels with No. 4 shot. He started off, but turned and asked for some more shells. These were refused and he then went down the road toward Mr. Cheatham's.

When he arrived at Mr. Cheatham's, Eddy White, a neighbor, was at the gate, having called on business. Lyle had answered his call and after calling Mr. Cheatham's young son, Joe Cheatham, went to the stable to feed. He had just gone to the stable when Mays came up and going to his house called, "Mr. Lyle." Not finding him he went on to the stable, about fifty yards further and going up to the open door, leveled his gun and fired, in full view of Mr. White. Joe Cheatham was just coming out of the house, and asked, "Pete, what did you shoot at?" "I shot at a bird," said Mays. White then asked, "Didn't you shoot Lyle?" Mays replied "No sir," and then said he believed he would go back by John's house. He returned to the stable, took a purse containing $5 or $6 from Lyle's dead body, and then instead of going to Thompson's house turned again and went directly home. Joe Cheatham ran to the stable and found Lyle dead, and White rode off to get assistance soon returning. Lyle was struck in the left side of the neck and death was instantaneous. He was taken into his house and the Coroner sent for, who held an inquest and developed the facts narrated above.

The verdict was that Lyle had come to his death from a gunshot wound at the hands of Pete Mays.

The assassin after reaching home returned Mr. Wood's gun and asked him to let him have his pistol. This request Mr. Wood refused, and Mays then went to the stable and fed the stock as usual. He then notified Mr. Wood that he would not be there to feed Friday morning and left, his wife going with him.

Deputy Sheriff Golay went to the neighborhood Friday, but not finding him returned to town. Saturday afternoon he went again, Mays having been seen in the vicinity. He could not be found and is still at large. The chances are that he is still dodging about the neighborhood, or has passed over the State line into Tennessee. It is not likely that he will attempt to do more than keep in hiding. It ought to be an easy thing to run him down and bring him to justice. Mays is about 40 years old, weighs about 160 pounds, is brown colored and wears a thin moustache. His wife is still with him, wherever he is.

Lyle's body was interred in the cemetery in this city Saturday.
